SATURDAY, JUNE 23.

THE ACTUAL hostilities between Russians and Turks upon the battle-fields of Armenia, gives occasion to us to make some remarks upon that country. Within its limits is included the sacred mountain of Ararat, where the Ark, built by God's own design, rested after the Deluge. A period of twenty-six centuries, from the cessation of the flood-elapsed without any very remarkable events occurring to the ancient Armenian race. In the beginning of the fourth century of the Christian era, a great change took piace amongst the Armenian people, by their being converted to Christianity. About A. D. 411, the Biele was begun to be translated into Armenian by Mesrob and his three sons, and was completed half a century later. This early version of the word has caused the Armenian to be regarded as one of the " sacred languages." The Armenian is not very suphonious, abounding in consonants. After an existence of several centuries filled with vicissitudes, from successive attacks of Greeks, Persians and Arabs, the Armenians were conquered by the Turks in 1875, and have continued in this condition down to the beginning of this century, when under Paskievitch, the Russians wrested from the Turks a considerable part of the territory of Armenia, including Etch-Miachin, the residence of the Armenian Patriarch. After the Turkish conquest, the Armenians, like the Jews, became scattered all over the ace of the earth. Last century an Armenian priest, Mechitar, founded at Venice the society of the Nechitarists, one of whose objects was the restoration of the ancient Kingdom of Armenia. At the present time, while the armies of Russia are invading Turksh Armenia, and the dismemberment White Eastern Pine, 1, 11-4, 11-2, 2 of the Turkish Empire is undertaken by that power, the civilized world is justified in reclaiming of Russia guarantees for the balance of power both in Europe and Asia, by the re-establishment of the Christian Kingdoms of Poland and Armenia. Thus, Russia, Turkey and Persia would be obliged to disgorge their shares of Armenia; while Russia, Austria and Prussia would be forced to throw up their spoils of old Poand. Both Poles and Armenians are conquered Christian nations, and as Russia boasts to be the champion of the oppressed Christians, the Czar eight consistently to restore Poland and Armenia to their ancient independence. THE WAR between Russians and Turks-since they have really come to blows, which still might have been prevented by the armed occupation of Wallachia by Austra-will render telegraphic communication between England and India and Australia via Turkey in Asia very precarious. Such a complication forciby strengthens our previous remarks concerning the desirability and expediency on the part of Great Britain to secure sure telegraphic communication with her Indian Empire and Auslian Colonies wistwards not eastwards. A submarine cable from British Columbia via Honolulu and the Fiji Islands to Sydney, would connect Australia and India, along with existing cables, with London and Great Britain,-passing constantly over British Territory (with the sole exception of the Honolulu break) when not laid securely on the bottom of the ocean. It is astonishing how short-sighted English statesmen-generally so wide awake-sometimes show themselves to be, as in this all-important question of safe telegraphic communication with the outlying divisions of the British Empire. We shall not | was at hand, and General Sherman marched up be astonished however to find the scheme of a sub- and through the Pass, entering on what turned marine cable between British Columbia and Aus- out to be a delightful jaunt through Georgia. tralia via Hotolulu and the Fijis, shortly on the tupis, at London, and we expect that it will be the orerunner of a steam line by the same route, as we their monster revivals, and persuaded by friends have already suggested, as soon as the British North American Inter Oceanic Railway is completed from Mr. Moody, in giving out the hymn to be sung Canada to Esquimalt, on the Pacific coast of British Columbia, about which there is so much angry discussion just now in that part of Her Britannic Majesty's Dominions. As England has so important reasons to uphold the sovereignty and independence of the Hawaiian Islands, the advantage of Honolulu being made a break station in any future scheme of telegraphic communication by a Pacific cable between British North America and Australia is self-evident, nor could this country be any loser

How FAR the Great Powers have sinned against the unfortunate Padishah is glaringly patent from the recent events in Roumania. That state is as much a part of the dominions of the Padishah, as Ireland is of the British Empire, or dismembered Poland of Prussia, Austria and Russia. Nevertheless, the Powers established the autonomy of Roumania, under a local prince, and at the same time the perpetual inviolability of its territory. In consequence, the Padishah has no longer any right to fortify or garrison that part of his territory. The result is that when aggressive Russia crosses the Pruth and marches through Roumantreaties even from entering into defenceless Roumania to oppose the Russian invasion, and the Prince of Roumania actually declares war against his own Suzerain, while the very conditions of his own existence impose on him the duty of maintaining the neutrality of his territory. The great powers, who have thus absurdly and unjustly tied up the Padishah's hands, do not even protest against Russia's invasion of Roumania. Under all circumstances then, the best policy of the Padishah would be to sell Roumania to Austria, which would stop for ever this periodical "passage of the Russians across the Pruth," becoming quite a stereotyped expression in European History. Simultaneously, the enlargement of Austria by the annexation to that Empire of Russian and Prussian Poland, would constitute a powerful barrier between the Baltic and Euxine against further Russian invasion of Europe, and settle the Eastern Question definitely, as far as the Russian conquest of Constantinople is concerned. From a religious point of view, we would thus have a great Catholic Empire wedged in between the autheran Prussians, heterodox Russians and the Mohammedan Turks, rendering less likely this constant recurrence of "throat-cutting for the honor of God" in that part of the world. THE HON. John Young, Canadian Commissioner made a long speech at Sydney lately, in which he said that the government of the Canada Dominion had begun a railway to the Pacific, and had nearly connected British Columbia by telegraph with the East of the Dominion. As we already have observed, a submarine cable between British Columbia and Australia via Honolulu and the Figis, will soon follow on the completion of the British North American Atlantic and Pacific Overland Telegraph. Also, when the overland inter-oceanic railway is completed in British North America, we expect to sea a steam line immediately started between British Columbia and Australia, via our port. We occupy a good place in the North Pacific. Meanwhile, let us strive to improve our internal resources. The Hon. John Young strongly advocated the adoption by all the Australian Colonies, Tasmania and New Zealand, of a Confederation like that founded in British North America. Such a measure would be sure to bring about the scheme of a submarine cable between the two confederations.

KHELAT is the capital of Beloochistan. A despatch from Calcutta, dated March 4th, says that the British Government has made a treaty with the Khan of Khelat, binding itself to pay him £10,000 a year and defend him from all foes, on condition of Great Britain's being allowed to garrison the principal places, construct railways, build forts and make telegraph lines through that territory. This arrangement effectually stops Russia from ever pushing on her conquests beyond Central Asia, as far as the Arabian Sea, even should she ultimately occupy Afghanistan, north of Beloochistan and south of Toorkistan, where she is now murdering the Tartars. The British statesmen are not such tools after all. This occupation of Beloochistan is one of the cleverest strokes of policy ever made in Asia by British statesmanship in the face of the Russian advance towards India!

Col. Tourtelotte, the Hero of the Song. A Washington letter to the Cincinnati Commercial says: On Gen. Sherman's staff there is a tall, stately man, with eyes so calm and cold and olde that one can never fancy their flashing, for they look as if they would quench any spark that might leap into them from his heart, with a manner so quiet and a voice so passionless, and even that he suggests his own native mountains with their caps of snow, that rear proudly above the hills and valleys nestling below them in the warmth and sunshine. But he is the hero of one of the most magnificent fights that took place during the March to the Sea-a fight that put a brilliant, bloody period to the one hundred and thirteen days' continuous fire under which Sherman's army had struggled eastward, and finally opened to them the door that led through a region of peace and plenty to the desired goal. He was in the advance guard, and with a few hundred men had reached Allatoona Pass, the key to the situation, when he received news that the enemy were advancing in force. Throwing up circumstances would permit, he waited the shock. And it came before long, for over the mountains, trailing their gray length along, came the Confederate army, flags flying, drums beating, and every heart strung up to the highest chord of bravery and desperation, for they knew it was more than just a battle to fight-they knew it meant the sustaining or knocking away of one of the few remaining props that sustained the fabric reared a few years before with such pomp, and now tottering towards its fall. On they came like a tide, rising nearer and nearer to the men waiting so anxiously behind the earthwork, for which they too felt the importance of the stake for they were about to play so grim a game knowing that, should Allatoona Pass be closed, Sherman might knock in vain at its portals, and that thousands of lives would be lost before it could be forced. Presently the advancing ranks stood still, received their orders, and with a wild cheer that made the mountains ring, charged up the pass; the gray sea rolled furiously against the walls of the fort; but what, at its flow, had been fierce fighting men, at its ebb were shattered. stricken things, whose uniforms were stained with that which changes blue and gray alike into the livery of death. Still the fight continued, and the ranks that in the shock had fallen back reformed and charged again, and so it went on until the little force that held the pass were stained and grimed with smoke and powder and blood, burnt with the flames that leaped from the guns and muskets, reduced to less than half their number, and almost dead with thirst and exhaustion. High among them stood the "cold Colone!," his face aflame with the same spirit that made his Haguenot ancestors do such brave battle with Guise and " Madame League," in the days when Balafre and the Spaniard had it all their own way in France, encouraging his men to hold out little longer, animating them alike by word and example, until into their midst rode a courier. who tumbled from his saddle, and saluting him said : " General says, sir, 'Tell Col. Tourtelotte to Hold the Fort, far I'm coming, and that I'll be there in about an hour.' "Then the men stood and cheered, turning their hot blood-shot eyes up, and seeing that the sun still shone and that life might still be hoped for. Once more "it was rattle and roar and powder-stench," and then came the blessed sounds of drum and file, telling in their strong and shrill voices that help Last year Col. Tourtelotte was in New York while Moody and Sankey were holding one of he went to it. Effects of Forest-Destruction. The effect of forest-destruction in Switzerland is described in a recent Swiss official report: As late as 1812, Conrad Escher, in describing the Val Maggia, in the Canton of Ticino, from the Village of Someo downward, observes that the valley is richly cultivated and adorned with chestnut trees, extending almost to the foot of the mountain which is itself everywhere clad with vegetation. Two-thirds of the surface of that beautiful valley are now covered with masses of fallen earth and stone, the river carries away the stoutest bridges, while the overhanging hights is to the Danube, the Padishah is withheld by are entirely stripped of trees. As an instance treation even from entering into defenceless Rou- of the effect of the clearance of forests upon climate, Prof. Landolt refers to the Upper Engadine, where the slopes are still wooded, and where the temperature is milder and more equable than in the denuded Valleys of Avers, Hinterhein, Urseren, etc., which lie 1,000 feet lower. Some valleys, indeed, have become quite uninhabitable through the destruction of forests, and the consequent disturbances of the temperature, as for instance, the Kalfenserthal. The water supply, too, is largely affected. Wherever the woods have been destroyed, the character of the water basins has been transformed almost within the experience of a single generation. Navigable rivers have become shallow streams, brooks have been changed into torrents during one part of the year and stony tracts during the remainder; while lakes have been converted into pestilential swamps, and fertile
